

Ickford News

I cannot guarantee a full-length newsletter nor a playful jaunt through the week's events drawing on highs and moments of elation. In short, very little has happened worthy of the written word.

I am pleased with our progress in terms of the provision for home schooling and, judging by the number of emails from parents, I think the majority of you are as well. We have taken some suggestions on board and we will constantly review things but I can't promise keeping everyone happy and I shan't be trying to.

The photographs of the children completing tasks at home have really been the highlights of the week and I have been building up a gallery on the website so that everyone can enjoy them. I have also been getting some snippets of written work emailed to me so, if your child has done some writing and they would like a comment or some advice from me, please attach it to an email or copy it and I shall endeavour to respond.

Miss Allen has started to read a story via Vimeo and I am sure she will not mind me putting the link on here so that children outside of her class can listen to it as well if they want to:

I shall send out the learning activities for next week during the weekend. Keep smiling and keep being kind.

Have a good weekend,
